Playing the Long Game: How Golf Lessons Can Improve Your Practice

This course will discuss how lessons learned from years of playing golf are applicable to professionalism both in and out of the courtroom. Just as golfers must respect the course, attorneys must treat the court, fellow lawyers and members of the public with respect and dignity. Just as one must think of their image of the golf course when choosing appropriate clothing required for play, one has a responsibility to protect the image of the profession. As a golfer would help a new player, an attorney should help those new to court proceedings when interacting with members of the public and officers of the court.
